another dam not far from its proposed location was completed last week after several months of unpublicized construction work, Humorously named "Little Millwood", it is a 20-foot earth dam on the Hempstead County Hunting Club property designed to create a reservoir to supply water to a big feeding station which the owners of Grassy Lake hope will attract ducks for the benefit of hunters in public areas as well as on private club property.

TOF — This is a view of the dam from the reservoir side,
It is 20 feet high, 400 feet long, and should create a lake about 1,300 feet long and 300 feet wide — about 12 acres. The drainage basin comprises around 190 acres. The dam has packed earth spillways at both ends.

BOTTOM RIGHT — This "downstream" picture shows the outlet watergate in near foreground at base of dam — and in the distance is a terraced field planted to millet which is a first-rate duck feed. Water will be fed onto this field when the millet crop is matured.

No shooting will be permitted within half a mile of the feeding area — the millet field — which is automatcally protected by federal regulation. The idea behind the development is to furnish one dependable feeding ground which will attract more ducks to this area in the shooting season, benefitting both Grassy Lake and public hunting areas.

The dam's construction was supervised by B. W. Edwards of Hope, acting manager of the Hempstead County Hunting Club, John V, Keck of the local Soil Conservation Service office did the engineering, and actual direction of the job was in the hands of George F. Brown, work unit conservationist of the SCS. down these decisions:

another dam not far from its proposed location was completed last week after several months of unpublicized construction work, Humorously named "Little Millwood", it is a 20-foot earth dam on the Hempstead County Hunting Club property designed to create a reservoir to supply water to a big feeding station which the owners of Grassy Lake hope will attract ducks for the benefit of hunters in public areas as well as on private club property.

TOF — This is a view of the dam from the reservoir side,
It is 20 feet high, 400 feet long, and should create a lake about 1,300 feet long and 300 feet wide — about 12 acres. The drainage basin comprises around 190 acres. The dam has packed earth spillways at both ends.

BOTTOM RIGHT — This "downstream" picture shows the outlet watergate in near foreground at base of dam — and in the distance is a terraced field planted to millet which is a first-rate duck feed. Water will be fed onto this field when the millet crop is matured.

No shooting will be permitted within half a mile of the feeding area — the millet field — which is automatcally protected by federal regulation. The idea behind the development is to furnish one dependable feeding ground which will attract more ducks to this area in the shooting season, benefitting both Grassy Lake and public hunting areas.

The dam's construction was supervised by B. W.
